At the last regular meeting of the Twentieth Century Art Club Mrs. Alexander Forbes read a paper on "The Palace of Manufactures." An extensive review of exhibits was given.

Mrs. Chase Thorne read a paper on "The Palace of Liberal Arts." By the way of eliminating the giving of dimensions, she said: "The St. Louisan is becoming mad. He is growing to believe that nothing is fine unless it is huge. This whim if his is a sturdy plant of sure growth. He began by boasting about his vast prairies, his long river, his vast distances, and we are becoming alarmed as to where he will venture after his big Exposition is closed.

"The architecture and sculpture leans to no school, it has something of Greece and much of the splendid remaisance of the French school. There is majesty in the vast picture, the triumphal statuary uplifts its airy splendor into the blue heavens. The general sculpture scheme symbolizes action rather than actors: there is no portraiture anywhere.
